By Doyle McManus and Don Shannon Los Angeles Times Service

NEW YORK - Nicaragua's talks with the United States appear to have reached an impasse, according to its leader, Daniel Ortega Saavedra. But Mr. Ortega said that he still hopes that negotiations can avert a Central American war.

Breaking with the U.S.-Nicaragaan practice of not commenting publicly on their oegotiations, Mr. Ortega denounced the most recent U.S. proposal in the talks as "total-In an interview Wednesday, he said that the United States had demanded that Nicaragua take specific steps to cut its military ties with the Soviet bloc and to end its support of other Central American eftist movements.

In return, he said, Washington has offered only vague, unspecified moves in the negotiations, which began after a visit by Secretary of State George P. Shultz to Managua on June 1.

"It's a proposal that, if we made it public, would be proof of the lack of responsibility, the lack of sincerity of the United States," Mr. Ortega said heatedly, striding around the hotel suite where he is staying during the opening days of the new reciprocal acti session of the United Nations Gen-ly equivalent. eral Assembly.

"We have to conclude that the U.S. proposals were made in order to give more force to the policy of liquidating the Nicaraguan revolution and to justify a policy of mili-tary intervention," he said.

He opened his briefcase and pulled out a typed document, which he said was the most recent proposal presented by the U.S. ne-goriator, Harry W. Shlandeman, on Sept. 5. Jabbing the document with his finger, he said that it would impose unequal obligations on Nicaragua and the United States.

State Department officials acknowledged that the document Mr. Ortega was describing was indeed their proposal, although they de-scribed it as a serious negotiating

Mr. Ortega also said that he sees no hope of reviving the negotiations between his government and the principal opposition political leader, Arturo José Cruz, over a postponement of Nicaragua's Nov. 4 election, which Mr. Cruz has de-

Mr. Ortega, who is the Sandinist presidential candidate, said the government leadership had con-cluded that postponing the election would be to fall into a trap. "If we don't hold our election on

Nov. 4, the United States will be able to increase its pressure against us," he said. "President Reagan will be re-elected, and he will have a freer hand, ... while we will not have been elected, and the United States will attempt to question our legitimacy because of that."

"Tve been following your elec-tion campaign on television," he added. "Your Democratic Party is behind; why don't they ask for a postponement of the election, to give them more time to campaign?" Mr. Ortega said he would invite the opposition to join in a "nationdialogue" after the election,

Delay in Vote Idles 500,000 U.S. Workers

WASHINGTON - The Senate approved an omnibus spending bill Thursday to keep most of the U.S. government running, but not be-fore hundreds of thousands of federal workers were sent home because there was no money to rut their departments. The Senate completed action on the $500-billion measure for fiscal year 1985, the most expensive piece of legislation ever considered by ngress, Thursday afternoon.

It had recessed Thursday morn-ing after holding its second all-night session within a week to work on the bill, which would finance most operations of the federal government for the next 12 months. House-Senate conferees will meet to work out a compromise version by Friday. Meanwhile, the House voted Thursday morning to approve an emergency spending extension to finance government agencies through 6 p.m. Friday, and the Senate followed suit. A spokesman for the White House Office of Management and the Budget said the president was expected to sign the measure. All furloughed workers, he said, were to report for work on Friday. An estimated 500,000 "nonessential" workers were affected by

- The ruling Politburo formally endorsed oo Thursday Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko's report on his talks with President Ronald Reagan and reaffirmed Moscow's "readiness for a serious, businesslike dialogue" with the United States. The Soviet leadership accepted

Mr. Gromyko's assertion that his talks with Mr. Reagan and Secretary of State George P. Shultz "did not reveal any signs" that the Unit-ed States intended "to adjust its policy course toward realism and peacefulness.

They allege that the farm was used as a dumping ground for bodies of victims murdered at the Makindye Army barracks outside Kampala.

The refugees contend that arms and funds for the guerrilla war come from inside Uganda, but one conceded otherwise. "This is the gateway to Uganda," he said of Kenya. "All the sinews of war - arms, ammunition, money and medical supplies - pass through here."

Despite official denials, some refugees also fear that the Kenyan government has been involved in some abductions. They cite the case of Balaki Kirya, head of the Uganda Freedom Movement, an anti-Obote organization, who was taken from his suburban Nairobi home in July 1982. One refugee has said he saw Mr. Kirya being escorted in a Kampala courtroom to face treason charges. He is believed to have remained in prison ever since. Officials at the office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees have recorded the accounts given by abduction victims and given publicity to some of their stories. Lack of Strong EC Leadership Is Worrying Officials

LUXEMBOURG - A oew and delicate question about the future of the European Community was heard often during the meeting of EC ministers that ended Wednesday: Can the incoming EC Commission provide the community with the effective leadership that it has been missing? The outgoing commission, headed by Gastoo Thorn of Luxembourg, has been weak and he spent too much time seeking compromises among commissioners, according to senior officials from EC countries and outside the community who were interviewed recently.

"Thorn is an arbiter, not a leader." a commission source said. Equally troubling, officials said, is the fact that the new commission now being assembled resembles what the magazine the Economist recently described as "a B-team."

The exception mentioned regularly is Jacques Delors, the former French finance minister, who takes sion's president. Seven newcomers have been named, three commis-sioners will remain in their jobs and three slots are still open on the 14member body.

"Gaston was never able to pull the commission together, and so they rarely functioned well as a team," said an ambassador to Belgium from outside the EC.

The major challenge facing Mr. Delors, the ambassador said, will be providing better management But he added that the task would not be easy given the "enormous complexities of issues, the unimpressive background of some newcomers and the job itself." The commission's main function is to propose policy initiatives to the EC Council of Ministers and to direct the community bureaucracy. Although its members are appointed to four-year terms by their governments, the commission is supposed to remain independent. It can only be removed as a body through a vote of censure by the European Parliament. But the truly executive body is the council, composed of ministers over in January as the commis- of member nations, whose presidency rotates every six months.

Clashes between the council and commission the commission often surface. The EC treaties. latest occurred after Mr. Thorn released last Friday a five-page letter to Peter Barry, the Irish foreign minister, in which be challenged the council's plans to expand the finance ministers' powers over EC spending. He hinted that the commission might take the council to the European Court of Justice.

Alan Dukes, the Irish finance minister, said in Luxembourg on each Monday that the commission was simply wrong in its views about the council's powers. He said the commission had not made itself familiar with the draft version of a compromise agreement that Mr. Dukes. acting as council president, had circulated to member governments on Friday evening. The plan was adopted by the finance ministers commission role as guardian of the Narjes, currently the commissioner responsible for internal markets.

Monday. Officials of the EC Commission and of member governments,

While expressing hopes that the new commission will work more closely with the council on policy issues, the officials complained that most of the commissioners named by member governments so far particularly the British and West German members - lacked international experience.

Traditionally, Britain, Germany, France and Italy each name two members, and other EC governments can name one commissioner

The two British commissioners will be Stanley Chinton Davis, a Labor Party member of Parliament, who from 1979 until last year was opposition spokesman for trade, prices and consumer protection; and Lord Cockfield, a leading authority on taxation and accounting, who was the government's secretary of state for trade between 1982 and 1983.

The West German commissioners will be Alois Pfeiffer, a trade speaking privately, insisted that ers will be Alois Pfeiffer, a trade Mr. Thorn was correctly fulfilling a union leader, and Karl-Heinz Speculation about how the new commission will function has focused with equal intensity on other newcomers, two of whom are former EC finance ministers - Henning Christophersen of Denmark and Franciscus Andriessen, who is the present commissioner for competition - and Willy de Clercq, the Belgian finance minister.

Both have worked previously with Mr. Delors, and they will constitute what a commission source described as "the hard core of the B-team." This group will probably include Grigory Varfis, Greece's minister for European affairs.

The new commission is expected to concentrate on expanding EC economic cooperation, notably in monetary affairs, but Mr. Delors has not yet said what he plans specifically or how he plans to divide the commission portfolios.

Mr. Delors has told visitors, however, that he considers the press criticism about the commission unfair and that he considers it essential that the commission operate, above all, as a team.

Karami Rejects Direct Talks With Israel, Asks U.S. Diplomacy

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service NEW YORK -- Prime Minister Rashid Karami of Lebanon, discussing the withdrawal of Israeli troops from his country, said Thursday that his government wanted to substitute some form of United States diplomacy for direct negotiations with Israel.

In an interview, Mr. Karami underscored the problems that have arisen since the new Israeli government said it was ready to withdraw from south Lehanon if its security oceds in northern Israel were met. Mr. Karami also rejected direct talks with the Israelis and said his

Buskto Right IRS Raling, Says He Was 'Singled Out'

By Jane Perlez TULSA, Oklahoma, - Vice President George Bush says he feels he has been "singled out" by tax collectors because he was not entitled by a ruling of the tax agency to do "what any other taxpayer" can do and roll over his capital

At a news conference here Wednesday night, six hours after his lawyers released information on his personal income taxes for 1981 through 1983, in Little Rock, Aras, Mr. Bush said: "I think a of of people out there would understand it and think if you're vice president that doesn't mean you should be singled out. I think I've been singled out."

Mr. Bush paid the Internal Reveme Service $198,000 in back taxes and interest in June after the service ruled that he had failed to report about $500,000 in income from the sale of his house on his tax return and improperly used $29,000 in leftover campaign

The information showed that Mr. Bush had an adjusted gross income of $810,447 over the threeyear period and paid $303,421 in U.S. taxes. He paid 48.6 percent of his income in taxes in 1981, 24.2 Idles Agencies percent in 1982 and 12.8 percent in

The issue in the house sale is the definition, under tax law, of Mr. Bush's principal residence. If, as he says, it is his home in Kennebunkport, Maine, which be bought in 1981, then be could apply the $600,000 in profits he made when he sold his home in Houston in 1981 to the purchase of the Maine home and not pay taxes on the capital gain from the Houston sale.

to ignite his campaign before the Nov. 6 election.

With Mr. Reagan bolding a large lead in public opinion polls, his campaign strategists said that the president's main task in the debates is simply to get through them without making a major mistake. Mr. Mondale, according to his political advisers, faces the more difficult challenge of breaking through the presumption of Mr. Reagan's re-election and shifting the electorate's attention from the president's personal popularity to issues on which polls show voters more in tune with Mr. Mondale.

At a news briefing here Wednes-day, James A. Johnson, national chairman of the Mondale campaign, said be did not expect the debates to cause a dramatic shift either way in Mr. Mondale's standing in the polls. The first debate is to be held in Lousiville, Kentucky, at 9 P.M. Smaday. Mr. Mondale has been seeking advice on debate strategy from a wide range of Democratic leaders, including members of Congress former President Jimmy Carter and some of Mr. Carter's former sides, including Patrick Caddell, a public opinion analyst. According to one of Mr. Caddell's associates, the poll taker told Mr. Mondale in a memorandom that the electorate has not yet been engaged in this campaign and that it would be a mistake to try to turn the debates into a referendum on Mr. Reagan. Instead, Mr. Caddell is said to the majority party in the House of have advised Mr. Mondale to try to persuade voters to look beyond Mr. Resgan's personal qualities and consider the consequences of his policies in a second term. On abortion, for example, that means arguing that a vote for Mr. Reagan will, in effect, decide that issue by giving him an opportunity to appoint Su-preme Court justices who agree with his anti-abortion position.

Mr. Johnson seemed to echo Mr. Caddell's views Wednesday as be outlined Mr. Mondale's objectives in the debate. "Mostly, we want to engage the electorate," he said. The mpaign chairman said Mr. Mondale would try to show that unlike Mr. Reagan be is in touch with the concerns of the average American family and that he has a carefully thought-out plan for dealing with

Hopes for Registration Drive Fade

WASHINGTON (AP) - Organizers who had once hoped to register a million new voters on a single day are now taking to the streets of a number of American cities with their hopes scaled down.

"We're not going to make the million. It just didn't come together the way we hoped," said a civil rights leader, Hulbert James, head of Voter Mobilization 1984, a nonpartisan coalition of more than 70 civil rights, feminist, peace, church, environmental and student groups. "A lot of people that we hoped to activate became demoralized." Mr.

James said. Even though it had to abandon its slogan of "A Million More in "84," the coalition still anticipated that a record number of new voters would be registered Thursday, Friday and during the weekend.

"We're saying 250,000 to 300,000 is within range," Mr. James said.

Ways to Help the Jobless

No early easing of the problem of Eu-rope's jobless millions seems likely. Demand and financial support from the government. and output are rising, but not fast enough to provide the needed jobs. The continent is in a typical growth recession. Most governments take the advice of the OECD and the IMF that the way out of stagilation is to increase the underlying efficiency and flexihility of Europe's economies — a slow job.

The problem is even worse than the crude figures - probably nearly 12-percent unemployment by the end of next year - suggest. Admittedly, some of these people are working on the black market: but others are excluded from the figures because they have given up the job quest as hopeless. More serious still is the concentration of unemployment. A fifth of Europe's young are jobless; more than 40 percent of job-seekers now fall into the category of long-term unemployed, many of them the older workers. It is hard to know whose plight is worse, the young who have never worked or the older generations who may never work again.

The unemployed get typecast: The longer you are without a job, the less likely you are to find one. And unemployment benefits shrink substantially after a time.

There are, as the French now underline, some things that governments can do. Education and training programs are criticized on the grounds that, after a year or so, the trainee is thrown back on the scrap beap, trained for a nonexistent job. Even so, a year or two bas been gained. Society has at least sbown compassion. And insofar as such programs raise the general adaptability of the labor force, they help to restore the flexibility that manpower in Europe currently lacks. Renault is proposing an amhitious plan to its worried workers — a plan, bowever, that and financial support from the government. Employment subsidies for the worst-hitgroups may seem to do no more than redistribute unemployment. Yet they can encourage firms to take on workers rather than machinery, especially if reinforced by other action to reduce the relative cost of labor. (Business taxes at present mount very steeply with the number of workers employed.) And, paradoxically, it could be helpful if it were easier for firms to trim the payroll when they fall on temporary bad times,

There may be benefits from cooperation tween the public sector and private enterprise to set up small firms to supply goods and services for which there is local demand that the private sector, working alone, does not meet. This idea is in its infancy in Europe. Its value has yet to be confirmed.

We have expressed doubt in this space ("Growth by Shrinkage?" Aug. 15) about major efforts to create jobs by shortening the workweek. The OECD also seems lukewarm, observing that the past decade has actually seen workers become less prepared to swap income for leisure. It may, however, be necessary to encourage early retirement for the older unemployed - even though this can be costly and can rob the economy of its more experienced workers.

Most options, indeed, are costly. Yet goveraments must do what they can - within the limits imposed by the efficient working of the market economy - to relieve the stresses of unemployment. The one thing not to do is to put at risk the better price stability that governments have so painfully secured. It would be hopelessly wasteful and no use to the unemployed. INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE

The Incumbent Is Champ

President Reagan has been needling the Democrats, and particularly Walter Mondale, with the suggestion that they are the all-time gold medal champion big spenders. But he is a bit out of date. The Democrats are no longer the spending chamoions. The gold medal is currently held by Mr. Resgan himself. He has spent more than the Carter administration, and more than any other American administration hack to World War II. He has spent more if you count defense in, and he has spent more if you take defense out. It is instructive to put the campaign speeches aside for a moment and look at the figures. The accompanying table provides spending totals, by fiscal year, as percentage of the gross national product. That is the best and fairest way to measure public spending. It takes infla-tion into account, and also the growth of the economy as population and wealth rise. The figures bere include off-hudget spending, which was higher in the Carter administration than now. And since Republicans sometimes argue that it is their emphasis on defense that is driving the totals up, we offer the totals both including and excluding defense. The figures through 1983 come from the president's hudget last Fehruary. The figures for fiscal 1984, which ended last Sunday, come from the update published in August by the Congressional Budget Office. (Federal spending as a proportion of GNP is currently falling because, in the present phase of the business ise, in the present phase of the business cycle, the economy is expanding faster than the government's spending programs.)

tially larger than the original Reagan budget figures, it has usually been in areas where the administration at least shares the blame. In both 1982 and 1983 the administration's grossly mismanaged farm programs overshot their budgets spectacularly, In 1982 it turned out that the president's hudget bad greatly underestimated the cost of interest on the federal debt. Similarly in 1983 it underestimated the unemployment rate and consequently the cost of unemployment compensation. As for 1984, it looks as though the actual spending total will be very close to the one that Mr.

Reagan originally proposed in his budget. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

The Best New Way to Die

"It was a whole lot easier," an elderly wom-an recently told a New York Times reporter, when God made the decision." She was talking about dying an old subject that is raising urgent new questions for families, physicians and lawmakers. When that woman was a girl, people died in their own beds, often of diseases like pneumonia, which was once nicknamed "the old man's friend." Now 30 percent of Americans die in hospitals, and most of them have outlived their parents's span by 20 years or more. Medical technology has prolonged their lives; often it has also prolonged their deaths.

The deathwatch is part of mankind's history. For millennia it consisted of friends and relatives sitting by helplessly as a life slipped away. If one wished to, one could pray, there was little-else to do.

Today, however, a deathwatch is apt to involve choices. What keeps the heart beating and the lungs moving may be a collection of machines, not the vagaries of nature. When should these miracles of mechanics be turned off? At what point do they stop keeping a functioning human being alive and merely prevent a worn-out body from dying?

One answer may lie in legislation being drafted by New York State's health commissioner. It would prescribe when doctors may legally withhold life-saving measures from certain dying or terminally ill patients.

"Any guidelines being developed," Dr. David Axelrod says, "will be based on the premise that the primary responsibility of physicians and hospitals is to preserve life. However, we recognize that there are situations where extraordinary measures tend to prolong death rather than maintain life."

The guidelines, when completed, are bound to provoke more debate. For it is no longer enough to worry about how best to live. Given a medical technology that has outrun the mo-rality needed to deal with the issue, one has to struggle as well with how best to die.

1909: Barcelona Worries Madrid

MADRID - The conservative Government of Antonio Maura no longer denies that the situation is serious in Barcelona, and even the Opposition — with the exception, of course, of the Radical Republicans (led by Alejandro Lerroux], who are in more or less open sympathy with the Barcelona terrorists - confess that to re-establish the Constitutional guarantees [after recent rioting in response to a call-up of troops to fight in Morocco] in Catalonia and Gerona, as has been done in the rest of the kingdom, would be rank folly. It has been noticed that the Barcelona Anarchists, in their bomb outrages, generally place two bombs calculated to explode at an interval of twenty minutes or half an hour. The second bomh is always carefully concealed. The criminals expect that the second bomb will explode when the authorities are present.

1934: Civil War Is Feared in Spain

MADRID — Spain has a government tonight [Oct. 4], but it finds itelf on the verge of civil war. Simultaneously with the announcement of the new Cabinet, a general strike was pro-claimed throughout the country. Mannel Aza-na y Diaz, former Premier and leader of the Left Republican party, issued a statement calling President Alcala Zamora a "traitor" and declaring that the Republic will be defended "at all costs and by all means." The general strike and Azaña's challenge were planned when it became clear that Alejandro Lerroux, who was asked to form a ministry, had decided to include members of the Catholic Action party, which all Republican elements consider anti-Republican. Trouble is anticipated, especially as the general strike order seems to have been obeyed throughout the country. The danger point is considered to be Barcelona.

A View: America Is Safer Under Reagan

WASHINGTON — It has become fashionable to depict American-Soviet relations as tumbling to their lowest point ever in the postwar era. It is sometimes even suggested that we are on a road to nuclear war in the not-toodistant future. Is it all really true?

Many of the words from Moscow have been harsh. The Russians' refusal to participate in nuclear arms talks is lamentable. The increased patrolling of Soviet submarines off American coasts is worrisome, even though they have provied these waters for many years.

But are we really less secure today than we were earlier, or just four years ago?

I think not. Quite the contrary.

Look back just two decades, for example, and compare President John F. Kennedy's 1,000 days in office to President Reagan's first 1,200 days. The Kennedy era is popularly recalled as one of smooth and skillful American stewardship over some of the contract of the con foreign affairs. Yet during that brief time we endured the Bay of Pigs fiasco, a disastrous superpower summit meeting in Vienna, a build-up of American involvement in Vietnam, the construction of the Berlin Wall and the Cuban missile crisis. Those were dangerous days. Events during the past three and a half years certainly do not match that cascade of crises.

Even in the 1970s, when the dialogue between Washington and Moscow was so rich and hopes for detente were so high, regional crises were still severe. From 1970 to 1976, while American and Soviet leaders held five summit meetings and an array of arms control negotiations, the Soviet. Union backed and armed the continuing infiltration of North Victnamese troops into South Victnam, making a peaceful settlement of that conflict impossible. The Middle East erupted and the Russians threatened to intervene with their own troops, prompting us to go on strategic nuclear alert. Those, too, were dangerous days. In many ways, 1979 symbolized the decade. During the first six months, Secretary of State
Cyrus Vance and Ambassador Anatoli Dobrynin et some 25 times, followed by the Carter-

Brezhnev summit meeting in Vienna where the strategic arms limitation treaty was signed. Still, regional crises flared. There was the flap over a Soviet brigade in Cuba. False Soviet statements about U.S. actions in Iran added fuel to the already hlazing fires after the American hostages were seized. Finally, the Russians invaded Afghanistan, starting what President Car-ter called the greatest crisis since World War II. In every year from 1975 to 1980, Soviet forces themselves or armies largely supplied by Moscow invaded or seized control of a different Third

In every year from 1975 to 1980, Soviet forces or armies largely supplied by Moscow invaded or seized control of a different Third World country.

World country: South Vietnam in 1975, Angola in 1975-76, Ethiopia in 1977, Cambodia in 1978 and Afghanistan in 1979. Nothing like this has happened in the past three years.

Soviet expansionism has been slowed, and there have been no full-scale crises. None of the three major wars during this period — Iran-Iraq, Lebanon and the Falklands — has led to confrontation between the superpowers.

Clearly, the world is not more dangerous.

What has made it more stable? Active U.S.

lomacy and increased deterrent strength. To be sure, we need to improve the current state of affairs. President Reagan is attempting to do just that Besides strengthening our relationships with our allies and others and restoring more credible military power, he has sought to reopen and deepen the dialogue with Moscow particularly in arms control.

At this stage it is difficult to say when or whether the Soviet Union will accept significant nuclear arms limitations. We do not know if it will accept deep reductions in nuclear forces. We do not know if our very different strategic concepts can be made compatible enough for us to agree on how to distinguish the more threatening kinds of weapons. We do not know if the Russians will accept true strategic equality or continue to mask their demand for strategic superiority in the guise of what they call "equal security." But we do know that we cannot find out unless we try. If, after enough time and with enough incentives, the answers to these central questions are no, then we will have learned something rather important about the Soviet Union and its real intentions. If the answers turn out to be yes, we will have taken a giant step forward.

I, for one, have hope for the future of arms control. This hope is grounded in several reasons.

First is the continuity that will come with a second Reagan administration. It will bring considerable accumulated expertise and lessons learned both about arms control in particular and about dealing with the Russians in general. Second, the strategic modernization program begun in 1981, with its base of a much healthier economy, provides considerably more incentives to the Russians to come to terms. The president's strategic defense initiative - popularly criticized as "Star Wars" - also adds incentives. Third, the intermediate-range nuclear missiles already deployed in Western Europe also belp prepare the ground for negotiating with Moscow. Fourth, the Russians will surely not change leadership as often as they bave over the past four years - and should thus be able and willing to engage in real negotiations.

Finally, we are ready for tough bargaining and equally tough trade-offs once the Russians return to the negotiating table.

This was adapted for The New York Times from a speech to the San Diego World Affairs Council.

A Regret: Reagan Seems Unsuited to Negotiation

WASHINGTON — Will it make a great deal of differ-ence that President Reagan now addresses conciliatory words to the S. viet Union? Probably not. That his Sept. 24 speech before the UN General Assembly had a political purpose is obvious. The White House, not the State Department, pressed for the softer draft, White House speech writers, not some idealistic Foreign Service officer, inserted the references to the leading champion of nonviolence in the 20th century, Mahatma Gandhi. The speech only continues an ef-fort that the administration has been making for nearly a year to lure the Soviet Union back into a more normal diplomatic dialogue. At the turn of the year, in an interview with Time magazine, Mr. Rea-gan promised to tone down his thetoric about the Soviet Union, On Jan. 16 he delivered his first conciliatory speech on U.S.-Soviet rela-tions. Were it not for his subsequent pre-broadcast joke about bombing the Soviet Union in five minutes, the memory of the earlier speech would be stronger and the UN speech would not be seen as such a gnificant departure.

Nor are such expressions about Mr. Reagan's strong desire for agreement with the Soviets confined to this election year. Forgotten is the five-page letter to Leonid Brezh-nev that he sent from his hospital bed in the spring of 1981, Recover-ing from a bullet wound, be wrote of his borror of miclear war, hopes for peace and willingness to move toward progress in arms control

At the United Nations Mr. Reagan was basically saying that although he was not yet prepared to change any substantive U.S. posi-tion, he wanted to resume negotiations with the Soviet Union. In 1980, while regularly advancing hard-line positions on arms control, he promised to sit down with the Soviets
"as long as it takes" to get an arms control agreement. So in some reBy Charles William Maynes spects the UN speech was a return to an earlier Reagan position.

Mr. Reagan is able to change his mind even on subjects about which he feels very strongly. One of the most skillful Reagan-watchers over the years has been Lou Cannon, political correspondent of The Washington Post. In his book "Reagan" he relates a fascinating episode involving then Governor Reagan. His new state finance director, Verne Ott, who was later secretary of the air force, learned from his predecessor, Caspar Weinberger, that one should never mention income tax withholding to the governor, who had stated repeatedly that his opposition to this idea was "set in concrete." Mr. Orr's problem was that California faced a serious cash flow problem. Finally, screwing up his courage, he presented the full case to the governor, who was also informed of widespread support for the proposal from legislators and fiscal experts. Mr. Reagan's reaction was, "You mean the emperor has no clothes?" He gave in.

The president does not confose stubbornness with pigheadedness. Confronted with impossible odds or new needs, be will change, and if his attitude toward the Soviet Union is new, it should probably be understood in that context. But is a change In attitude enough? An important book reviewed in the International Herald Tribune today — "Deadly Gambits," by Strobe Talbott — provides voluminous evidence for the case that the problem for the Reagan administration's arms control policy is not the president's attitude but his work habits and personnel policies. Unless he can change both, the arms control record of a second Reagan administration is likely to resemble the sterile and ultimately threatening record of the first.

In Mr. Talbott's book, based on extensive interviews with numerous detailed proposals and took deter-mined action to back up those govkey officials in the Reagan adminisernment officials who were pressing ration, the president emerges as a figure unwilling to read more than a three-page memorandum on any complicated subject, convinced that for progress. The best news in re-cent months is not that Mr. Reagan met Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko but that be worked so policy is settled when a speech is hard to prepare for that meeting. given, and emberrassingly misin-formed about many of the essentials Unless such practices become a habit, it seems true that, despite the new tone toward the Soviet Union, of the American defense posture.

Mr. Talbott concludes: "Even though he chaired 16 National Se-curity Council-level meetings on START, there was ample evidence O 1984, Charles William Maynes. that he frequently did not understand basic aspects of the nuclear weapons issue and of policies being prompligated in his name."

On personnel issues the record is also troubling. Mr. Reagan has resisted efforts of people like Brent Scowcroft, national security adviser in the Ford administration and irman of Mr. Reagan's Commis sion on Strategic Forces, to explain to him that there are individuals in his administration who make progress on arms control impossible. Administrations have made progress on arms control only when the president took a personal interest in

Sad to Say, the Community Isn't Going Bankrupt

By Giles Merritt

BRUSSELS — The specter of bankruptcy that has been baunting the European Community was dispelled this week, but no cham-pagne corks popped in Brussels. The foreign, finance and farm ministers of the 10 EC countries managed at key talks in Luxembourg to shore up the Community's tumbledown fi-nances for a little while longer, but a good many top officials inside the European Commission would prefer to see the EC go bust with a bang.

The ensuing administrative paralysis and political panic, they argue, would do more than all the past years of inter-governmental suiping to con-centrate minds on what needs to be done to restore the EC to health—in short, to stop stuffing money into the pockets of rich European farmers.

Oct. 20 was to have been the date ou which EC commission officials started signing checks on empty bank accounts in order to pay subsidies to the farmers. Now the patch-up deal negotiated in Luxembourg means that further funds will cover up the one-billion-ECU shortfall of 1984. It may sound odd, but the rescue package has produced a lot of long faces in Brussels. The emergency bailout patched together by the member governments on Monday and Tues-day falls far short of treating the root causes of the Community's political and financial difficulties. It plugs this year's gap between approved EC funds and outlays, and proposes a 1985 budget that will probably suffice for the eight months until late August. But it fails to solve the problem of the uncontrolled farm spending that is causing the bankruptcy.

Runaway farm spending has brought the Community to its knees. The common agricultural policy (CAP) mops up three-quarters of the total EC budget — leaving little or nothing for the victims of industrial collapse in Europe. This year the reckon, the situation is still worse, farm subsidies will cost more than Two-thirds of all dairy farmers while the rich 20 percent with big dairy farms account for about 80 percent of a century ago, farmers were needy and also politically important. An open-ended commitment was essential to EC unity. Today, however poor they may be, they are seldom worse off than Europe's 12 million registered unemployed.

The fact that the number of farmers has shrunk to 8 million from more than 16 million in the mid-1960s means that they are of increasingly less account in national politics. Why else are the farmers one of the few interest groups reduced to making noisy protests in the streets of Brussels rather than effective ones in the corridors of power back home?

The case for subsidizing the truly disadvantaged farmers of Europe, and for assuring agricultural self-suf-ficiency, is as strong as ever. If Europe's policy-makers could agree on ways of reassessing farmers needs, there is no reason why the Community should not be relaunched on the basis of a sounder and fairer agricultural policy. All it should take would be a long, hard look at where the present, cripplingly expensive farm subsidies are really going.

Large landowners naturally claim the biggest subsidies. They are accused of excessive profits. Cutting back on these excess profits is the key to reforming the Common Agricultural Policy, says Brian Gardner, a Brussels-based policy expert with the farm consultancy Agra-Europe. In the grain sector, he says, these excess profits mean that earnings for rich farmers in, say, the Paris basin, East Anglia or Jutland are 15 to 20 percent above a fair return on capital.

In the dairy sector, other experts the EC governments' first fumbling attempts earlier this year to rein in farm spending. A March 31 agreement trimming milk prices and output was a historic step. (It was a small step though Milk entitut next were in step, though. Milk output next year is now to be 121 million metric tons instead of 122 million.)

Yet Europe does still have poor farmers, and once Spain and Portugal join in January 1986 it will have more of them. Even in France, small-holders abound, with a quarter of them subsisting on garden-sized plots. Nor does all the lavish funding go to the farmers. Half of the CAP budontinues despite awareness inside EC governments that something has gone very wrong with the Community's farm policy. The figures cited in this article are familiar to many public officials and politicians. Yet a small, well organized lobby representing the interaction of the formal continues of the formal continues the interaction of the formal continues of the co senting the interests of big farmers has so far managed to block reform.

get in most years goes on export sub-sidies, and a further 15 percent is spent on storage of farm surpluses. It is a strange commentary on life in Europe that this state of affairs

What needs to be done is for the subsidies to be redirected away from milk, beef and grain (which take about 70 percent of the CAP a cash) toward Mediterranean produce. If it takes bankruptcy of the Community to achieve that, the shock will be a good political investment.

Recently, in his unprecent interview at the end of a long campaign day, he said something he did not quite mean but that some anarchists masquerading as conservatives do seem to think:
"Elliot believes government can do good things for people. I don't." That statement, which puts Social Security, the interstate highway system and World War II (to cite just three government undertakings) in their place, is refuted by, among other things H.R. 5783, be it ever so humble.

Simcha Jacobovici's opinion col-umn "Ethiopian Jews Are Dying: Why Doesn't Israel Help?" (Sept. 18) is a tragedy. Forty years after the Holocaust, we remain traumatized for not having done enough to rescue European Jewry. Some reactions are guided less by the needs of the pre-sent than by guilt over the past. In-stead of focusing on the muracle of Ethiopian Jews being rescued and brought home to Israel, Mr. Jacobo-vici rips at himself and Israel in frusvici rips at himself and Israel in frustration that even more can't be done.

Panel Finds Security Alert Unheeded at Beirut Post

By Philip Taubman New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The House Select Committee on Intelligence has charged that officials responsible for security at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut paid insufficient attention to warnings of potential terrorist attacks before the building was bombed last month.

The committee, in a report issned Wednesday with the approval of Republican and Democratic members, concluded that "the probability of another vehicular bomb attack" against U.S. installations in Beirut was "so unambiguous that there is no logical explanatinn for the lack of effective security" at the embassy.

"Intelligence portrayed a situation where those responsible for security at U.S. installations in Beirut - both in Washington and on the scene - should have been on full alert and should have taken every precaution possible to thwart just such an attack as occurred," the report said.

Responding to the committee's report, the State Department said its own investigation into the bombing had not been completed but that "if there was negligence involved, we will find it."

A department statement also defended security measures at the em-bassy, noting that they were 75 percent completed at the time of the

On Tuesday Mr. Reagan, campaigning in Brownsville, Texas, said he accepted full responsibility for security at the embassy. "We've had an investigation, he said. There was no evidence of any carelessness or anyone not performing their duty."

Asked if he considered the case closed, Mr. Reagan said, "Yes." The six-story embassy building

CAMP TAURO, Nicaragua — Eden Pastora Gómez, back with his guerrilla force in the jungles of southern Nicaragua, says he will continue to light against the country's Sandinist government, despite political and linancial setbacks.

Although acknowledging a lack of money and supplies, Mr. Pastora denied reports that his Democratic Revolutionary Alliance is finished as an effective fighting force. He spoke Tuesday at his jungle camp on the banks of the San Juan River, the boundary between Nicaragus and Costa Rica. It was one of his first interviews on Nicaraguan soil since he was wounded in a bombing at another rebel camp on May 30. That bombing killed four persons.

In Tuesday's interview, Mr. Pastora repeated that he would not join most of his group's political leaders in an alliance with a larger, better funded rebel group based in Honduras, the Nicaraguan Democratic

Long-Term Benefits of Exercise Outweigh Risks, Study Concludes

WASHINGTON - Vigorous exercise performed regularly may protect against as well as provoke sudden death from heart attack. But long-term health benefits of physical activity appear to outweigh the risks, according to a major study released Thursday.

The study, by researchers at the University of North Carolina and the University of Washington, was published in the New England Journal of Medicine. It showed that risk of sudden death from cardiac arrest is greater during strenuous exercise such as jogging, swimming, tennis nr chopping wood. But it found that, in men who exercise regularly, the overall risk of dying at any time from cardiac arrest is reduced by 60 percent when compared with those who seldom

The study consisted of interviews in the Seattle area with the wives of 133 men who had no known prior heart disease and collapsed from cardiac arrest. Interviewers asked what the men were doing at the time of the attack and their normal exercise levels. They found that nine suffered cardiac arrest while exercising. Six survived after resuscitation efforts. Men who exercised fewer than 20 minutes a week had a 56 times greater chance of cardiac arrest while exercising than while resting. More active men who exercised vigorously at least 2 hours and 20 minutes weekly had a live times greater risk of attack while exercising. The study found that the overall risk of cardiae arrest among exercise enthusiasts was only 40 percent of others. It found that only about one of every 20,000 exercisers each year risks sudden death. "For the first time, one study appears to resolve the apparent contradiction posed by the occurrence of deaths during exercise on the one hand and the burgeoning reports of the benefits of habitual exercise in coronary heart disease on the other," Dr. Paul D. Thompson of Brown University and Dr. Jere H. Mitchell of the University of Texas wrote in an editorial accompanying the study.

"If Investment management were just a matter of making the right guesses, there would be even more new names getting into the act every day, and far fewer old names still around."

Jacques Rossier, Senior Vice President

However, as Mr. Rossier puts it, the first thing to remember about investment management is that you have to be very clear about your investment objectives. And for that, you also need to know how the external factors and the range of possibilities can affect these objectives. This is why many investors are looking for even more than an ability to make sound decisions when they choose a portfolio manager. They want to know what they're getting into, and they want to make sure their objectives are sound. So a good investment manager has to know his customers as well as his markets. It's a good reason for going to a good bank, with the organizational resources and experience to give you the "up-front back-up" you need.

Italian Crime 'Envoys' Said to Operate in U.S.

Federal intelligence experts have learned through undercover opera-tives and a top Italian underworld informer that the Sicilian mobsters apparently concentrate on international drug trafficking and take orders from heroin smugglers in Italy. They may sell drugs to American mobsters or distribute the narcotics independently, authorities said.

On placards and handbills, the six accused Communist authorities of holding their wives and children liable for their defections and practicing "modern hostage-taking." Richard Wecke, now a coach for the West German rowing team, said that the Communist authorities have made examples out of the families to discourage other prominent athletes from defecting. Mr. Wecke said that requests by

by Katherine Knorr

ARIS — When Jacques Brel died in 1978 at the age of 49, he was internationally famous as a performer, but Brel the man was less well-known, an intriguing, contradictory figure - intelligent but not cultured, hooest when it suited him and mythomaniac the rest of the time, a very macho man who sang of mean women and saw himself as their victim.

and saw minsen as their victim.

In fact, Brel was an actor, inventing his life and re-inventing his past; using words, even in conversation, more as song, as symbol, than as fact; staying up all night smoking cigarettes and drinking hard, talking about love and sometimes politics, two subjects where he preferred fixture to feet, eventions where be preferred fiction to fact; creating and un-creating le grand Jacques — until in the end he did oot know who Jacques Brel

"Brel ... kept on asking himself who the hell he was, why had all this happened to him," said Olivier Todd, the author of a new French biography of the Belgian singer and composer, which cuts through many of the myths that Brel and his friends and lovers created. "He's a formidable actor. He playacts for himself. But there remains neverthe-less something hard and honest in the end."

That something hard and bonest showed in the performer perhaps more than in the man. He wrote hundreds of songs, toured a good bit of the world, acted in 10 movies, directed two others, played Don Quixote in the French "Man of La Mancha." He was unlike many singers of his generation in his professionalism: He did oot arrive late for concerts; he did oot have tantrums; he oever used playback; he did not follow fashion; and he gave himself completely to his songs — "He did give you this incredible impression of singing at his best for the last time," Todd said.

AnD he stuck to what he said. When he announced in 1967 that he would not again sing in concert, he meant it. Todd said: "He says, 'I'm going to go and see elsewhere' ... and he does. He says Tm going to stop singing, and he does not come hack. If you look at the French stage, I mean, the number of people — Manrice Chevalier must have left the stage 25 times. Perhaps that's why he found it so difficult to keep his word privately."

Indeed, he did not always keep his word, and he did oot always tell the truth. Todd, the former editor in chief of the magazine L'Express, went back to Brel's letters, to the women and men who were close to him many of whom had not talked about Brel publicly in many years — and found that the singer was neither the genius-saint who spoke in lyrics that his last mistress portrayed, nor the bitter misanthrope that some of his songs portray.

He was both unsure and arrogant, generous and vindictive. He was never entirely comfortable with what it meant to be from a small, linguistically divided country that was the hutt of so many French jokes. He felt physically awkward, thought himself ugly. He called song a minor art. From the beginning, he did not want to be what people said he was. He liked to contradict. Early on, Todd said, he "comes to Paris and decides that he's going to be a poet. He thinks he's a poet. He says so in his letters. And then when people start calling him a poet, then he rebels and goes to the other end, and he keeps on saying there's no such thing as talent, only

Brel was attractive funny, tough-talking, hard-drinking, eternally smoking, "I find him very interesting. I find him very original and very irritating, and it's ohvious that he's - I hate the word - cootradictions is the euphemism of the day for him," Todd said. "He's oot an intellectual, So what? So much the better. I mean, the Sorbonne is full of intellectuals who are dreadful bores, and a lot of intelligent people are not intellectu-als." And in a way Brel the singer and Brel

the man did not think entirely the same way. "His talent was more intelligent than he

"I had oo idea how little he knew about music — the fact that he couldn't decipher a note," Todd said. "He regretted it later in life, just as he regretted not having had a regular education. Thank God that he didn't His first songs are really so corny. . . . Imag-ine if he'd been at Brussels University, and in the evening went around the bars singing his things, he would by maturing have seen that they were very bad and he would probably have dropped it." Instead, Brel went to Paris, and in five years he found his way.

His songs are controversial, harsh, rarely

But there were always women in his life, often several at a time, and while he did not always treat them elegantly, he always - as in his songs - presented himself as their victim. "He's a macho victim. He's very, very macho," Todd said. His book shows a man who, if he was not a conventional husband and father, ocvertheless had a very conservative view of home of women, in and out of song, that most fascinated people. In his songs, women are cruel, mocking, calculating, inconstant; they are does who betray stags, fruits that ripen and rot. Todd quotes him: "I am oot misogyam wary of them because I hate to suffer, to have toothaches. . . From what I know of women. I think that men should walk among them like cars. ... Watch where they put their paws." In the end, for talking, for working, for daily living Brel preferred men.

His songs about women came from his experience, and yet curiously they go much farther, are much more bitter than he was. "Curiously, and interestingly, and artistically, his songs are oot literally autobiographical, but at the same time he has to live through these situations - separations, terrible women - to be able to produce songs," Todd said. This was part of creating Jacques

"What I did find interesting but odd is that he managed to create the image of the misogynistic singer. That's one of the reasons I went into his private life — and there was a discrepancy, obviously. And I do think now that one of the reasons be left the stage is that he realized there was something wrong with singing black and living white. Because be did a lot of harm to a lot of women, the important ooes in his life, but he was also extremely nice to a lot of women. Let him who is without sin cast the first

Acting and the Uses of Fear

ARIS — On the small screen, life's rich pageant is a game of follow the leader. The present trend in television is to remake old films ("The Sun Also Rises," "Tender is the Night,"
"The Razor's Edge") with oew leading actors to attract young viewers.

Right now, "The Hallmark Hall of Fame" is preparing the goldenest oldic of them all, another version of "La Dame aux Camélias," which is always called "Camille" in the United States, although there is oo character in it by that name, the doomed and beflowered courtesan being Marguerite

Gautier and her callow lover Armand Duval. "Camille" has been done for American television four times since 1948 (the original story was written by Alexandre Dumas fils a century earlier), and it has been adapted to the screen at least 19 times with stars ranging from Sarah Bernhardt (1911) to Clara Kimball Young, Theda Bara, Nazimova, Yvonne Printemps and, of course, Greta Garbo in Garbo was an elderly 32 at the time. Hallmark's Lady of the Camellias is Greta Scacchi, who appeared successfully in "Heat and Dust" and is 24. Her Armand is Colin Firth, 23, who played in the stage and screen versions of "Another Country" and says he not only bas oever seen the Garbo film but didn't know there was one.

In addition to English leading actors and an English director, Desmond Davis, the cast is completed, as is so often the custom these days, by English character actors of such staunch talent that they could make "Camille" work if it were played by Popeye and Olive Oyl. They inclode Billie Whitelaw, Rachel Kempson, Ben Kingsley, Denholm Elliott and Sir John Gielgud, who played Armand early in his career and is oot surprised by the story's durability.

"Tubercular beroines are always a good card to play," Sir John notes. The respected critic James Agate wrote a good deal about Bernhardt's Lady of the Camellias, he says. 'Agate says Bernhardt oever wore a came

lia. Now they're festooned with them."
"Camille" is being shot entirely at Fer-rières, the Rothschild chateau about an hour from Paris, and today is the big gambling scene, with chandeliers glowing against silk-hung walls and extras in 1840s evening dresses crowding vivaciously around the gaming table.

But someone who by now is probably lying deep in an unmarked grave has forgotten the ivory ball for the roulette wheel. It will take two hours to fetch one from Paris. The production subsides and the director, who has a quirky, elfin face, tries to be good-humored about it. "I would rather someone bad walked in with a tiny roulette ball and said. 'I've lost the table,' " he says. Billie Whitelaw, who plays Marguerite's flashy tart chum, relaxes in her dressing room insofar as is possible in a very tight dress of a virulent salmocella color that must oot crease, a red wig that must oot tousle, and makeup that must not he dented by the heavy-rimmed spectacles she usually wears.

HE is one of Britain's leading stage of Samuel Beckett, who has written several plays for her. "The fact that Samuel Beckett writes plays for Billie Whitelaw to star in is one of the few comprehensible things about him," an English critic has said. Billie Whitelaw ooce played Marguerite Gautier on television ("You stay around long enough and you find yourself playing the older friend," she says). She was in Hitchcock's "Frenzy" and for the director Jack Gold has just finished filming the role of a Greek Cypriot widow.

"She never stops talking, I doo't know, I always have parts that go on and oo. You do Beckett and what do you get? Long speeches you have to do in one take." She has unconsciously assumed the widow's accent as she talks, just as later when simply speaking the name Edith Evans her voice automatically swoops into that actress's most famous words, "A handbag?"

Billie Whitelaw's career has ranged from revue to Christopher Hampton's "Tales From Hollywood" to John Barton's 12-hour marathon for the Royal Shakespeare Company, "The Greeks."

"I started as Artemis. In the middle chunk I was Andromache. I ended with a marvel-ous speech of Athena in which she says so rightly it has to have balance, whatever you do. I've always thought that since I was young - life has to equate to a straight line and it would seem that it is so."

"She's very good oews," says Peter Adam, who produced the BBC television version of Beckett's "Happy Days."

"Whatever she does is respected, she's not one to be drawn into that chic actorish thing." A comparison the English often make is with Simooe Signoret: There is oo apparent affinity but what is probably meant is integrity, earthiness and a total lack of actressy "side."

Billie Whitelaw as Prudence in "Camille.

"Listen to Billie go on, she does like a chat," comes the teasing voice of Colin Firth from outside the open dressing-room door.
"Get us a mention, Billie," urges Patrick yecart, who plays Armand's sidekick.

They're sending me up something rotten out there," she remarks good-naturedly. She makes no move to shut the door.

Born in the Midlands, Billie Whitelaw was named Diana. Her father, she says, probably had a few on the way to the registry office and Diana emerged as Billie, "I don't mind now, I hated it as a child." Her mother sent her to an amateur theater because she stuttered and by 11 she was a radio actress, playing small boys. "I don't even know if I want to be an actress, though it's a bit late in life to say that. I oever had to make the choice. I was oever stagestruck."

She went straight into repertory theater and has never had any profesional training. "I do feel I have a permanent school sauchel on my back. I feel totally inadequate for anything I do, even soap opera. I work very hard because it frightens me. I always start with the promise that I can't do it."

(Later, at lunch the actors talk about the best moment of a production. The younger ones agree that it is when your agent says you've got the joh. "It's when the curtain goes up and you're finally free," Billie Whitelaw quietly says.)

Fear makes ber prepare so iotensively that she aften gets more out of a role than it contains. "I'm all hit and miss. I go over it and over it and work and work before the work actually starts. Once I have gone over the role, I can do it any way. There are so many ways. Billie Whitelaw is made up of so many different people. I like to be told."

As an experiment, the director John Dexter once told ber to play Desdemona five different ways. "He was satisfied with all five," she says.

ILLIE Whitelaw is now on the board of the Royal Academy of Dramaoc Arts, an honor she finds deeply unsettling, "I said yes but I dnn't know what it means yet. I certainly can't sit in judgment oo other actors. I'm bad at being oo the board of anything, I cannot du committees. I like to spend time with my family. It sounds silly, but there's always mountains of wasbing to do."

She is married to the writer Robert Muller and they have three sons, two by Muller's previous marriage. She says she is a recluse. Who's Who in the Theatre lists ber hobby as Do it Yourself. "I don't have a hobby. They said what are you doing oow and I said putting up a shelf." Her eagerness to follow direction has helped make ber an ideal interpreter of Beckett, who has directed her several times and with whom she has on occasion rehearsed over the telephone.

"He is meticulous, to put it mildly. And that is a quote from him, to put it mildly." In his scripts Beckett often marks rbythms by putting dots after a word.

The first actual note he gave me was when we were doing 'Play.' It said, 'Please, four lines down, three lines in, make it three dots instead of four." This sort of detail, which might drive other actresses mad, was ultimately extremely helpful. "If I get the music right, I'm all right.

I do as I'm told once I get the rhythm."

During the early 1960s, at the exciting start of the National Theatre in England, she shared a dressing room with the other young actresses, Maggie Smith, Joan Plowright and Geraldine McEwan and alternated with Maggie Smith as Desdemona to Laurence Olivier's "Othello."

She began her Beckett career with "Play" in 1964 because, she says, she was the only one with nothing to rehearse. She did "Play as a fill-in while preparing for the 17th-century comedy "The Dutch Courtesan," and life has oever been the same.

She appeared alone in a Beckett evening last winter nn Broadway and in December will lecture on the playwright in Santa Bar-bara, California. "Last Sunday I saw Sam and told him I'd been asked to lecture. He laughed and laughed. I said, I know."

In her first Beckett, she says, "We covered ourselves with oats, jelly, surgical glue, water, fuller's earth and dabs of gray and green colnr. As we spoke, bits would disintegrate." In "Rockaby," the only word she spoke onstage was "more," repeated four times. In "Nnt I" only her mouth was visible, the rest being covered in black and in an extremely uncomfortable position. "I've been asked to do it again. Not for millions. It was like falling backwards into hell."

She began to eojoy Beckett wheo she played Winnie in "Happy Days" in 1979, starting buried to the waist in sand and ending oeck-deep. Io Paris the play was called "Oh les beaux jours" and it was played by Madeleine Renaud with insufferable winsomeness. "Encore une journée divine," she trilled out the first line. Billie Whitelaw sees it quite differently.

"He's quite cynical in a way. The first line, 'Another happy day.' "She says it with the weary padence of someone getting out the kitchen mop. "Another happy day, here we go agaio, another f- happy day. "I started to enjoy that because there's a character to play — it's the story of all our lives, banging by our nails."

The Blessings and Pitfalls of Knowing What's Being Sung

by Donal Henahan

TEW YORK - The Lord, omnipotent and ambidextrous, gives with one hand and takes away with the other. Coosider the mixed blessing that some of us prefer to call supertitles. (The term, after all, refers to translations projected above the stage, not

Recently, many operagoers have had reason to give thanks for the innovation that first sprouted at the Canadian Opera under the trademark of Surtitles but that is known elsewhere by a wild variety of names, including subtitles (the New York City Opera) and OpTrans. The latter designation, which is the Pittsburgh Opera's entry this month into an increasingly crowded field, is short for opera translation.

By any name, the device has taken hold in a way that no one could have predicted with confidence last season when the City Opera pioneered the idea in the United States. Braving disdain and incredulity, it decided to supertitle its production of Massenet's "Cendrillon," which was borrowed, titles and all, from the Canadians. Now, we hear, even the Metropolitan is planning to experiment with a translation, possibly to run at the side of the stage because words projected overhead might not he visible from all seats in the house. This is a fear to be taken seriously, and not only at the Metropolitan. When the Pittsburgh Opera introduced Op-Trans the other evening for its production of Verdi's estimable but virtually unknown "La Battaglia di Legnano," the translation could not be seen from some main-floor seats in Heinz Hall and ticket buyers were so advised

Considering the newness of the idea and the variety of opera houses in which it is being tried out, the merits of the running translatioo seem so far to outweigh such flaws, most of which probably will prove to be minor and correctible. Technical errors, such as poor timing or anticipated jokes, can he annoying, but in my experience they have merely diluted the experiment's success.

And, while artistic reservations may be held oo several counts — will most operago-ers, for instance, become so dependent on the titles that they will not bother to read bbrettos or even synopses? — oo develop-ment since the invention of the electric footlight has held more promise for enlightening the andience without distorting the work itself. Sung translations inevitably sin in that way to some extent, no matter how sensitive-

UT an unbreakable law of compensation seems to be huilt into the universe, at least when it comes to gifts from above. How could the Pittsburgh Opera know, for instance, that its production of "La Battaglia di Legnano" would be illumi-nated on the one hand by the projected translation and undermined by it on the other? The difficulty, glaringly obvious on this occasion, might not have been apparent to most of the audience if the story line of this opera, one of the most obscure of Verdi's mature works, had not been up there, insisting on his version of the opera rather than that of the director, Tito Capobianco.

The program book was not above some suhterfuge in support of Capobianco's con-cept. Yes, an act-by-act synopsis gave a dim Italian city states, banded together as the Lombard League, joined forces to defeat the German invaders led by Frederick Barbarossa. However, the time of the action was given as 1848, a year that found much of Europe in a revolutionary uproar and saw Italians drive out the Austrian occupying armies, if only temporarily. Unfortunately, it is exceedingly doubtful that Barbarossa could have led an army with much vigor in 1848, since he would have been 672 years old at the time. His struggle with the Lombard League took place, you see, in the 12th century.

Once committed to transporting Barbarossa and his foes into the middle of the 19th century, Capobianco was forced to use Draconian methods. Since medieval armor would have looked odd, he put his medieval warriors in top hats and long pants, exactly reflecting the time of Verdi himself.

This stroke could be rationalized, in a way. Verdi did after all mean his audiences to see the parallel between the German invaders of 1176 and the Austrian occupiers of 1848. He was a fierce patriot whose works of that period were saturated with propaganda in the cause of Italian unification.

Nevertheless, the libretto that Verdi set to music in this instance simply will oot travel. While the singers were striding about in comparatively modern dress, they were talking of matters and persons more than six centuries in the past. We hear in Italian and read in plain English continual references to the 12th-century battle between Barbarossa and the Lombard League.

In an attempt to disguise the shift in period somewhat, Capohianco has the knights carrying sabers, though hroadswords and maces probably would have been the order of the day in 1176. In fact, the weapons of choice in 1848 certainly included muskets and cannon, which of course could out appear in this production because their presence would make the historical charade being played onstage even more incredible.

ESPITE some telling touches, Capobianco's concept fell between two stools. Both in the staging and in the synopsis provided in the program book, his decisions diluted the opera's historical richness. The need to disguise the work's 12th-century origins means that details from the libretto were suppressed, naturally. Yet, without changing the title of the work or the words being sung (and shown to the audience in translation), the director could not make his 1848 concept interesting in depth. The details of Verdi's involvement and the transalpine upheavals of 1848, which might have made an updated "Legnann" plausible and exciting, could oot be worked into such a hybrid production without denying at every step what the audience was both hearing and seeing in print.

There might be ways around this sort of impasse, of course. The whole libretto could be jettisoned in favor of new words that exactly suited a brilliant directorial concept. This solution would have the virtue of retaining the music, for those who prefer to attend the opera with eyes shut. Or (if a touch of irony may he allowed here), why not provide not only new words but new music as well? That would solve all the problems anyone could think of. In any event, the currently fashionable way of updating operas is rarely satisfying and the emergence of supertitles is likely to make audiences increasingly aware TIBERIAS, Israel -- Just as we came to the mount where the Sermon on the Mount was preached, the horse decided he'd had enough of me. He took off at a gallop into the grapefruit groves. The world became a mad jumble of blue sky, dark mane, gold-green leaves, fruit scents, pain in the saddle and beckoning black earth. Only a merciful God must have kept me from

Our guide on the lead horse turned around and smiled: "Everybody hokay?" He was working on his English. "Rarely better," I said, hoping he caught the mance. My wife, queenly on her tame mount, did, and giggled.

"Perhaps you'd rather the Syrians captured me," I said, glaring over at the nearby Golan Heights. She giggled again. I stared off at the Sea of Galilee below, shimmering blue beside the alabaster buildings of Tiberias, and squared my shoulders for the rest of the ride. The meek may be blessed, but I wasn't ready to inherit the earth

On rare occasions, the lucky traveler comes upon a jewel of a place—sounds nice, turns out perfect. Just so it was with Vered Ha Galil, "the Rose of Galilee." An unlikely combination of Biblical setting and Sun Belt aura, the ranch is the hard-won dream of the former Edward Stone of Chicago, now Yehuda Avni of the Galilee, 58, veteran of three Israeli wars and innumerable servings of the best lemon pie this side of paradise.

HE ranch itself is a cluster of 10 cottages, a large barn, 15 horses ready for houriong or weekloog trail rides and a restaurant surrounded by the yellow-flowered hills of Galilee. Vered Ha Galil comes complete with cactus and lariats, with American fried chicken and western "Wanted Dead or Alive" "Nothing is as easy as it looks. Everything takes longer than you expect. And if anything can go wrong, it will — at the worst possible moment," a law that does not apply in this enchanted rose farm that Yehuda Avni found as bare land 24 years ago.

Avni's tale is one of those remarkable make-the-desert-bloom sagas that Israel specializes in. But it has a special American twist to it. Like Frank Sinatra and Abraham Maslow, he did it his way.

"I grew up in Chicago," Avni said. "In World War II I was with the 82d Airborne. After the war, I was at the University of Geneva and I met a Swiss officer who had been fighting with the Israelis. He was telling his experiences so I decided to see the country. The fighting was over. I was just going to stay a few weeks. But I had this instant feeling that I was coming home."

Avni went to work on a kibbutz, did well, then to a moshav, a modern, more independent farming operation. He has the calm of a veteran farmer and the thick-muscled build of a rodeo cowboy, both of which stood him in good stead when he "got restless, doing the same thing over. I decided to start something from scratch that I

Enter Zane Grey, an inspiration from Avni's youth: It would be a horse farm for trail rides through largeli countryside and plunges into the archaeology of the Biblical land.

"We burnt our bridges and sold the farm. I spent six months wandering Israel on foot. I didn't have a car." He found his site, then spent six months persuading the government to lease it to him. He and his wife raised roses for money, and painfully cleared the land. She thought him at times a bit crazy, then at times crazier.

"I could not do it. I have no vision," said Yona Avni, who makes up for any such lack with an at-the-ready warmth and attention to detail. "It was hard times at the beginning. People were after us for debts." A native Israeli, she had been a nurse when she met Avni. "I could not have done it without her," he said. She was called back to hospital duty from the ranch during the 1967 war, when her husband iomed his military unit.

The budding ranch was left unattended for three weeks but with a note to passers-by, mostly soldiers and journalists, to help themselves there. Afterward the Avnis found the ranch in fine shape, and many sojourners had left money for the absentee hospitality.

HE glories of Vered Ha Galil range from the sweet water, served alarmingly in vodka bottles, to the "best hamburger in the Middle East," from the ease of the Avnis to the rustic coziness of the cottages. But for us the greatest of these were the night sky and the trail ride to the Mount.

The ride began inauspiciously for me, a nonhorseman. The first horse I mounted tried to bite me. Not hard, just a nip to show who was boss. Then he tried again. The young woman in the stable jerked his head around. "Pull on the reins," she said. "Show him who's

A summit conference, including Avai, decided I should shift to a horse more used to novices, and we were off - my wife, the guide, a woman recently emigrated to Israel from California, and myself.

The sky was a high, hard blue. The fields were full of flowers that the friendly guide explained in his newborn English. We considered the lilies. We trudged downhill, stopping for a tank being curted up toward the Lebanese border 30 miles (about 50 kilometers) north.

N Israel, drenched in blood ancient and fresh, it is not hard for the historical imagination to leap. The hills had a strength. The sea below held a lesson. On horseback the pace was slow enough to contemplate the words from that sermon: "Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy ... You are the salt of the earth, but if the salt has lost its taste ... For if you love those who love you, what reward have you? ... No one can serve two masters for either he will hate the one and love the other ... Prav then like this, 'Our Father who art in heaven...'

The ride back was quiet and had the bittersweet resonance of imagining the words now 20 centuries old spoken in these fields: "Do not lay up for yourselves treasures on earth . . . Judge not, that you be not judged . . . Ask and it will be given to you, seek and you will find . . . Enter by the narrow gate, for the gate is wide and the way is easy that leads to destruction ... You will know them by their fruits." We entered by the front gate to Vered Ha Galil, tired and happy, drenched with grapefruit juice, and went for dinner to the house Yehuda Avni had built.

On the way back to our cottage we looked at the stars and decided to send some newlywed friends here for the romance of the night sky. The stars seemed close enough to louch, a fierce silver firmament fit for the shepherd's song: "When I look at thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon, the stars which thou hast established, what is man that thou art mindful of him ... yet thou hast made him little less than God.

"You can understand the shepherd's philosophy," Yehuda Avni had explained earlier in the restaurant, recalling the long solitary nights they spent under such skies (while I asked for just one more helping of lemon pie). Then he announced his own philosophy for Vered Ha Galil, a phrase gathered from a YMCA poster back in Illinois, four wars and a name ago. "A stranger," said the poster, "& just a friend you haven't met."

Unloading produce in Pike Place Market.

Seattle's Historic Market

by Marian Burros

EW YORK - Bushels of Walla Walla onions for $1 a pound, row upon row of nearly tied and stacked fresh Dungeness crabs, each as sweet as a Maine lobster but only $3.89 a pound, bunches of yellow squash blossoms just waiting to be stuffed. What many Americans consider costly huxuries, shoppers at the Pike Place Market in Scattle

But then the Pike Place Market is unlike any other farmer's market in the United States. The mixture of stalls and shops that cover seven acres (almost three hectares) downtown, overlooking Elliott Bay, is not a restoration, like the South Street Scaport in New York or the Quincy Market in Boston. It is said to have been in continuous operation longer than any other market in the country. Opened in 1907, it has fought more than one battle for survival, but, unlike most other city markets, it has won them.

Fike Place is really not a tourist stop, though tourists with an interest in food seek it out. Most of the people on the streets are serious shoppers. On a busy, sunny Saturday there may be as many as 40,000 of them. To be sure, not all the farmers in the market offer local produce. Those who sell food from all over the world the year round are distinguished from local farmers by the height of their stalls: the farmers have "low stalls," the others "high stalls." The market has its share of boutiques, but the refurbished buildings also house stobid German Americans selling Bavarian meats and a grungy oyster bar with tables covered with faded cloths. Also available is the city's famous "killer" cream; raw, certified and 49 percent butterfat, it is so rich, local cooks say, that it whips when you shake it.

Just as some of the stalls have been passed down from generation to generation, the habit of shopping at them has too. Seattle residents have always maintained a special relationship with their farmers. The market was started in response to anger over high food prices. In an account that sounds as modern as yesterday's newspaper, farmers in 1907 were accusing middlemen of paying them too little and consumers were com-plaining that they were being charged too much. According to "The Pike Place Market" by Alice Shorett and Murray Morgan (Pacific Search Press, $12.95), cherries that cost 6 cents a pound in 1906 were 10 cents a pound in 1907, while onions went from 10 cents to $1 a pound. "This rise in food costs," the book says, "coincided with the boom in Puget Sound lumber prices following the San Francisco carthquake and fire in April 1906."

HEN the market opened 77 years ago it was an instant success. Soon the farmers were followed by fishmongers, butchers, dairymen and restaura-teurs, and, in the 1960s, by artisans. The bustling shopping area was at its heyday during the Depression, but World War II brought radical changes. By the 1940s many of the farmers, who were Japanese Ameri-cans, were interned; other farmers went to prock in defense plants. The end of the war work in defense plants. The end of the war saw a mass exodus to the suburbs, and for reasons that now seem unfathomable people all over the country traded freshness for the convenience of one-stop shopping at super-

The Pike Place Market's decline set the stage for the inevitable plans to replace it with high-rises and parking lots. By the late 1960s, however, people were having second thoughts about tearing down their past and replacing it with tall, impersonal buildings. Through a voter initiative in 1971, the market became a historical district and was re-

It is not the little shops that make the area special; it is the arcade that is called the Public Market, where Pasqualina Verdi, a native of Italy, has been hawking ber fresh vegetables for 29 years. "When I first start," she said, "only two people selling basil. Now

Indeed. Fresh basil is as ubiquitous as parsley once was. There is also plenty of fresh rosemary, sage, thyme and mint, not to mention arugula, which sells for $1 a bunch, and local blueberries, at $2.25 a quart. What is exceptional is Mrs. Verdi's special cucumbers, fetching $1 each and as sweet as sugar

INIATURE vegetables are displayed matter-of-factly here, alongside the wax beans and bell peppers. Baby bok chop, baby artichokes — the kind that can be eaten choke and all — and baby beets and carrots are common, so common that Shirley Collins, owner of a fine kitchen-equipment shop in the market area called Sur la Table, was startled to find that baby beets are a transferred to him that baby beets are a transferred setting item elsewhere in the country. "They're on the ends of the greens we buy," she said, "We usually cook the whole thing."

At some of the stalls the Japanese and the Italians, have been proloced by the levest

Italians have been replaced by the latest wave of immigrants from Vietnam and Cambodia. From among the pints of tiny yellow tomatoes for 75 cents and raspberries at $2 a pint, they sell their specialties, such as edible chrysanthemum leaves and what one vendor says is tiny leaf spinach (whether it is or not the aftertaste is of spinach). Perhaps like the basil of 29 years ago, the curiosities will be commonplace one day. The variety of sea creatures is equally appealing. Four kinds of salmon are available now and City Fish Market has them all. Its second-and third-generation owners, the son and grandsons of David Levy, who came to Seattle from Marmara, an island off Tur-key, in 1903, sell 20 kinds of fish a day — Dungeness crab from Puget Sound and Alaska, tiny Olympia oysters in the winter and goeduck clams, among others.

Restaurants: Soothing Fare Along the Gentle Loire

by Patricia Wells

IEN, France — In the gentle valley of the Loire, every other town and village seems to be named for either a chateau, a wine, a cheese or a pastry. That speaks well for gastronomy. And like the soothing landscape that is crisscrossed by lazy, winding rivers, flat golden wheat fields and a vineyard or orchard here and there, the food is neither startling nor supendous, but perfectly matches the tamed

There's mild goat cheese everywhere, from the towns of Selles-sur-Cher, Chavignol and Sainte-Maure, while rivers deep and shallow offer a bountiful assortment of fresh salmon, pike, perch and shad. There's a world of esoteric but worthy wines to be discovered, from towns like Thouarce, which produces the honey-scented wine known as Bonne-zeaux. As well, one finds the better-known wines from the villages of Savennières, Vouvray, Sancerre, Chinon and Bourguell, which produce some of France's best "little" wines. As is true everywhere, the wines, cheese and river fish seem to be at their best when consumed sur place, on home turf.

While wandering about chateau country, the clean and manageable town of Gien is definitely worth a brief stop for lunch or dinner. The quais along the wide stretch of the Loire are perfect for a long and tranquil stroll, and the restaurant of the Hôtel du Rivage offers a good view of the river. It's a cheerful, sparkling spot decorated in shades of blue and mauve, a pleasant restaurant filled with a faithful clientele.

The young waitresses are outgoing and attentive, and you'll find honest local fare, such as snails cooked in the region's Sancerre wine and coq au vin prepared with the fruity red Chinon. Fish and shellfish offerings include a chilled mussel soup flavored with basil, sea trout with sorrel sauce, fresh salmon with wild morel mushrooms, and a simple grilled sole. There is also a stunningly fresh and well-chosen selection of regional cheese, and good local wines that don't often appear on wine lists outside the area.

Here you can sample as an aperitif the finest sweet wine of the Anjou, Bonnezeaux. This wine, with its strange-sounding name, is made from the chenin blane grape, which in this region is called pineau de, la Loire. Chilled, the wine reminds me of taffy apples, or better yet, a tart, crisp Granny Smith apple that's been injected with a mild honey that is the target in the carry in the larget and the carry in the larget in the larget in the carry in the larget in the carry in the c - sweet and tart at the same time. In producing Bonnezeaux, the grapes are left on the vines until late October, making for an explosive, fruity wine that maintains a refreshing, lemony acidity, so it's neither beavy or cloying.

With the meal, you might want to try one of the local red Chinons made from the cabernet grape, a wine that is, unfortunately, often drunk before its time. To enjoy a Chinon that is well made and well aged, try the 1976 Clos d'Olive, from the reputable house of Couly-Dutheil. It's a bargain at about 130 francs ($14) a bottle. The restaurant at the Hotel du Rivage in Gien, where one can dine well for about 150 francs a person, wine and tip included, is one of many French restaurants flagged with a red R in the Michelin guide, suggesting good food at moderate prices. The red R usually signals restaurants featuring regional fare, a good thing to seek out in the French country-

OREIGNERS traveling in France — especially those who frequent the country's better restaurants — have long complained of an annoying diningroom habit. It is the custom of grouping foreigners, usually English-speaking, together in a single dining room. The practice is understandable: If there is only one Englishspeaking waiter, it makes sense to group English speakers so the staff can properly attend to guesis' needs. Unfortunately, what often comes with it is a certain "take the money and run" attitude on the part of management, and all too often the assumption that anyone whose native tongue is English is gastronomically ignorant.

After five years of dining regularly in France, I have rarely seen such a histant example of this custom as at Auberge des Templiers, a popular and well-respected res-taurant just outside Gien. The management should know better. Evidently it doesn't. American and British diners were shuffled together into one portion of a dining room, waiters did little to hide their gentle disdain, and the sommelier obviously assumed we neither knew nor cared much about wine.

Two different wines were ordered, and the sommelier summarily brought whatever he felt like. One wine was wrong altogether. The other was not of the vintage we ordered. After the error was reluctantly corrected, the sommelier did not even bother to pour the wine for the customary tasting.

Seated at what had to be the worst and most awkwardly placed table in the house, we put up with a constant commotion and clatter from the nearby passageway, and never managed to draw the waiter's attention on either the first or second try.

Despite the slow and inattentive service, the food was superb: A sublime, rare-roasted halbran, or young wild duck; a salad of watercress, mushrooms, rouget and lotte in a fine-flavored, creamy sauce; and a delightful pear poached in cassis, a black-currant cor-dial, served with an exceptional almond 'sherbet. And the bread is a dream: thickcrusted, sourdough bread festively shaped in the form of a crown, from the bakery in the nearby village of La Bussière.

If you can get the sommelier to bring you the right wine, the list offers some real treats: a variety of 1980 and 1981 Chablis from François Raveneau, priced at 150 francs; a 1978 Chorey-lès-Beaune from Tollot-Beaut at 145 francs; and a 1979 Châteauneuf-du-Pape, Mont Redon, at 135 francs. RAVELING west toward Tours, gas-tronomes generally head for Barrier, long one of France's best-known restaurants. While the restaurant still bears the name of Charles Barrier, it is no longer under his direction. The owners are now Guy Tricon and Jean André. A recent dinner at the newly refurbished Barrier, with its elegant, flower-filled dining room decorated in restful shades of terra-cotta, was highly disappointing. The service could not have been more professional. The food was just short of disastrous. Barrier's wonderful homemade bread still stands out, but one doesn't visit Tours to eat spaghetti squash or waterlogged fish salads served with bean sprouts, tasteless hard-cooked quail eggs and unripe cherry tomatoes. But that is what is now being served at Barrier. Sauces were generally overreduced and salty, and main dishes, such as the bland noisette d'agneau, were served with a watery potato grain. Diners might be advised to save the 400 or so francs it will cost until the kitchen sorts itself out.

Strangely enough, the same management seems to do all right with its bistro right next door, an unpretentious spot known as La Petite Marmite. Here one finds the same friendly service, the same good homemade rolls, and a fine range of regional specialties. Try the well-seasoned terrine de pintadeau, served with a green salad dressed with a green salad with a green salad dressed with a green salad dressed with a green salad dressed with a green salad with a green salad with a good, vinegary dressing; as well as the homemade boudin noir, or blood sausage, served with a crusty potato gratin. The ruby-colored house Bourgueil hints pleasantly of ripe raspberries, and the meal ends with a wellchosen platter of fresh goat chesse. Ignore the gibelotte de lapin, with its unpleasantly gelatinous sauce and what appeared to be, in the heart of France's mushroom-growing region, canned mushrooms. One can dine heartily for less than 180 francs a person, including wine and tip.

NYSE Prices Fall in Slow Day

NEW YORK — Bolstered by a drop in some key short-term interest rates, prices on the New York Stock Exchange scored a small gain Thursday that helped Wall Street snap a four-day leging street.

Thursday that helped Wall Street snap a four-day losing streak.

But the slow trading pace indicated investors still were uncertain about the outlook for the economy even though retailer reports projected a slower but sustainable growth rate.

Analysts said many investors were waiting for third-quarter corporate earnings reports over the next few weeks. Many traders have been disturbed by reductions in estimates by both companies and analysts.

Purveyors of doom profit by prophecizing the collapse of capitalism, parroting the gloom manifested by Spengler in his classic work "The Decline of the West". Despite the surge of stock prices, pariahs of pessimism continue to expound upon negativist themes. They exist in a subterranean world, where fantasies, disguised as ideas, are churned out by charlatans. In times of stress their world oozes from the depths and suddenly fascinates and dominates multitudes of responsible people. We need only allude to the hordes of scared speculators who were cajoled into dumping stocks when the Dow dipped under 800, enchanted by the illusory glitter of gold at $820 an ounce, chasing silver up to $44. Our analysts recall a Sunday edition of a major N.Y.C. newspaper which featured 20 advertisements extolling the virtues of the "barbarous relic", when gold was glistening. Now, with gold under $340, advertisements or articles heralding gold are rarer than truffles in McDonald's. Which is precisely the reason why we are at this level Purveyors of doom profit by prophecizing the collapse of capitalism in McDonald's. Which is precisely the reason why we are at this level dedicated gold bugs, subscribing to the law of contrary reason.

As mavericks, we urge readers to buy into weakness, to sell into strength, mocking the behavior of the Crowd. It may be illuminating to note that in 1982 when the Street was cringing, C.G.R. rallied its clients, prognosticating that the "American market will thrust upwards with record volume as funds flow into dollars; that the DJI will touch 1,000 before hitting 750". Our optimism is a matter of record. On lying 36 this year, while the market was complete. is a matter of record. On June 26 this year, while the market was comatose, our researchers flashed a buy signal, musing "the market will erupt on the upside, vaporizing prophets of doorn". Within five trading sessions, the Dow leaped 87 points. And now? Our forthcoming letter delineates why the Dow will cataput over 1500; in addition, we focus upon two emerging "special situations" with the dynamics to vault 500% or more, as have prior "incubating" equities. Financial Institutions Look To Encoding for Security

By LEE DEMBART Los Angeles Times Service

OS ANGELES — Every business day, some $900 billion moves around the world through the electronic transfer of funds. When electronic transfer of securities is added. the total worldwide activity comes to between $6.3 trillion and $6.5 trillion a day.

That is a tempting target, particularly because computers, which handle such functions, can easily be broken into by clever and dedicated opponents.

But coming to the rescue is the science of cryptography, a formerly arcane pursuit useful principally to governments for spying and for diplomatic and military commi Cryptography, or the making and breaking of secret codes, is now mushrooming to meet the demands of people with money and information to protect.

Last month, the U.S. Treasmy announced that it would begin encrypting all of its elec-tropic fund transfers, and the banking industry is expected to follow suit. William A. Crowell, deputy assistant secretary of the Treasury, said in an interview that until now the Treasury's daily electronic transfers of large sums of money was subject to tampering by people "who had any technical prowess at all and any bent for larceny."

"It's only been ignorance that's saved us and the whole financial community," Mr. Crowell said. "That's not going to be the case any more. It's certainly better to secure these things than to leave them out in the open.

The move to encrypt information to keep it secure is just beginning and is expected to pick up.

A lot of companies know that in the information age, there's lots of communication and competition going on and lots of opportunity for invasion of privacy and crime," says Leonard M. Adleman, a computer scientist at the University of Southern California who is a leading theoretician in the field. "They see cryptography as one of the key tools in preventing that."

HE need to maintain computer security coincides with revolutionary academic developments in cryptography. The computer, which is the cause of the problem, holds the key to its solution.

In 1976, Whitfield Diffie of Bell-Northern Research in Mountain View, California, and Martin E. Hellman of Stanford published a paper called "New Directions in Cryptography," which presented a new idea for encrypting and decrypting information. Secret writing is as old as Caesar, but Mr. Diffie and Mr. Hellman gave it a new, computer-based twist, spawning a new field called public-key cryptography.

"There's a lot of activity and lots of interesting questions," says Ronald L. Rivest of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, one of the foremost researchers in cryptography. There is an interplay between cryptography, theoretical computer science and real-world concerns."

The strongest of the new crypto-systems was developed by Mr. Rivest of MIT, Mr. Adleman of USC and Adi Shamir of the Weizman Institute of Science in Israel. It is called the RSA system, using the initials of its three creators. It is based on the difficulty of breaking a large number into its factors.

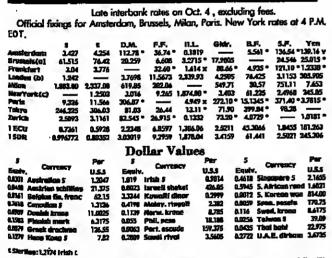

Public-key codes are based on the fact that some mathematicaloperations are easy to do in one direction but hard to reverse. For example, it is easy to multiply two numbers together to get their product but hard to figure out what two factors were multiplied together if only the final product is known. It is easy to calculate that 397 times 91 equals 36,127. Bot given 36,127, it would take a while to break it down into 397 times 91. For very large oumbers (100 digits or more), no feasible way is currently known for determining the factors in a reasonable

Public-key codes have the unique property of requiring different keys for encryption and decryption. A key is the piece of information that tells how to encode a plain message or decode an encrypted one.

U.S. Accountants Fear Merger of Giant Firms

By Gary Klott New York Times Service

NEW YORK -These days the partners at Price Waterhouse and Deloitte Haskins & Sells are making the rounds in Washington and huddling with clients across the country to ease any apprehensions over the prospective marriage of the two huge accounting firms.

As well they might. The prospect of two premier firms combining to form what would easily be the world's largest public accounting firm has shaken the accounting field. A worldwide partnership with revenue of nearly $2 billion and about 50,000 people under the same revenue of nearly $2 billion and about 50,000 people under the same professional roof would clearly be something new.

"We were snuned," said Norman Klein, managing partner of Fox & Co., recalling his reaction to the proposed Price Waterhouse-Deloitte merger, a union of the fourth- and eighth-largest firms. Earlier this week, Mr. Klein's firm, the 13th largest by one measure, announced that it was discussing a merger with Alexander Grant & Co., the 11th biggest.

That was less a reaction to the Price Waterhouse-Deloitte proposal — negotiations were under way before word of the larger merger at out at the end of Angust — than a common response to the wave got out at the end of August -- than a common response to the wave of change and the rampant competition that has swept public accounting in recent years. It is unlikely to be the last.

Peter R. Scanlon, charman of Coopers & Lyhrand, the third-biggest firm, doubts that a Price Waterhouse-Deloitte merger would touch off a wave that would shrink the Big Eight down to the Big Four, but he said everyone in public accounting is watching devel-opments closely. "We'll see how this merger works," he said, "the impact on the people, the impact on clients and the impact on

The merger discussions come at a time of renewed scrutiny on Capitol Hill, particularly from Representative John D. Dingell, head of the Oversight and Investigations subcommittee of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce. Mr. Dingell, a Michigan Democrat, has asked for an antitrust review of the Price Waterhouse-Deloitte merger and has scheduled hearings on the accounting profession later this year.

LOS ANGELES — The Bass

family of Texas, a strong supporter of the management of Walt Disney Productions Inc., increased its percent Thursday by purchasing 9 percent of the firm's stock for $182.5 million, officials said.

It was not immediately clear whether the remaining 400,000 shares of stock also were owned by Mr. Jacobs, who had said he might seek to take over Disney and sell some of its assets.

The Basses paid $61 per share for the stock. The Jacobs group began accumulating its Disney stake in mid-July and bought most of it for about $47 a share.

Analysts discounted the possibility of a takeover bid by the Bass family, which said in a joint statement with Disney that it planned no further purchases.

"This acquisition on our part represents a total commitment to the new management of Walt Dis-ney Productions and to the long-term development of assets," the company quoted Sid Bass as say-

Disney was the most actively traded stock Thursday on the New York Stock Exchange, and closed down $4 at $55.25, reflecting the receding takeover threat. It was the second big purchase of Disney stock by the Bass family in two days. On Tuesday, the family bought 2.5 million shares for about $150 million. A Wall Street source confirmed Thursday that those shares were sold by the New York financier Ivan Boesky and Financial Corp. of America, Lee Isgur, an industry analyst with Paine Webber in New York, said the Basses were "making it easier for their investments to appreciate by getting rid of disruptive elements that bave taken up so much of management's time."

Stake in Tidewater

Mr. Jacobs's decision to sell his stake in Walt Disney switched attention to Tidewater Inc., an oilstake in Disney to just under 25 services company which Mr. Jacobs has targeted as a possible acquisition, Reuters reported from New York.

Investors reasonedthat the Disney sale freed up Jacobs funds for a bout with Tidewater or another

In mid-August, Mr. Jacobs told the Securities and Exchange Commission that a group he heads owned 8.9 percent of Tidewater. Mr. Jacobs also said his group was thinking about taking over the company and had been discussing the feasibility of such a move.

U.K. Joblessness Rose to Record In September

United Press Interna LONDON — Ucemployment in Britain in September rose to a record 3.28 million, or 13.6 percent of the work force, the Department of Employment said Thursday.

The total jumped 168,000 from August, exceeding the previous record set in January 1983 by about 60,000.

Economists said the increase was doe to recent graduates claiming unemployment bene-fits and to seasonal factors. The increase in adult unemployment was larger than anticipat-

Britain's employment sccre-tary, Tom King, called the lat-est report "very disappointing." "We have got to do a lot better than we have done in recent months to make sure we are competitive and create more real jobs," he said. High interest rates and the seven-month-old miners strike also were hurting the economy, Mr. King said.

Hoechst Predicts Record Profit, Higher Payout

FRANKFURT — Hoechst AG expects 1984 profit to exceed last year's record worlo group earnings of 909.4 million Deutsche marks ($300 million) and to increase its dividend from 1983's 7 DM a share, the management board chairman, Rolf Sammet, said in a statement released Thursday. Despite slower growth of sales and capacity utilization in the second half, he said, we expect to finish with a better profit than last year. This will give us the possibili-ty" to pay a higher dividend. He gave no figures.

Mr. Sammet said, however, that growth would slow in coming years and a further rise in profit in 1985

The fact that we have 2000 branches in over 60 countries means that we can speed payments dramatically, allowing you to make more profitable use of funds.

The fact that we're an integrated and closely-linked network of offices staffed by specialists in international trade means that we can offer expert assistance in solving problems no matter where they may arise; simply because we're used to dealing with them daily.

And the sheer range of services we can provide (including roundthe-world foreign exchange dealing in 55 currencies through 18 locations, merchant banking in eight financial centres, Eurocurrency lending, trade and project finance and local banking facilities) almost certainly means that you'd benefit substantially from a link with Standard Chartered.

Call us, and find out more. We think we can make a highly profitable difference to your international business.

DEADLY GAMBITS: The Reagan Administration and the Stalemate in Nuclear Arms Control

By Strobe Talbott. 380 pp. $17.95. Knopf, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Sol Zuckerman

C'TROBE TALBOTT's new book about U.S.-Soviet relations is fascinating, but also deeply depressing in its illustration of the futility of the two superpowers engaging in negotiations to limit nuclear arms of the kind which ended so abruptly in Geneva in Decem-ber of last year. It is also a considerable achievement. Talbott has provided a brilliant reconstruction of the steps that led to the tragic breakdown of both the intermediate nuclear forces (INF) and the strategic arms reduction (START) negotiations.
President Reagan took office in 1981 determined to strengthen U.S. defenses, and convinced that bilateral negotiations with the So-viet Union to curb the East-West nuclear arms race had somehow or other always led to a reduction in the United States's military power. As Talbott puts it, never before "had a president made pessimism about the existing state of the military balance a basic and continuing tenet of his world view and program. Defense spending had to be increased until "overall military and technological superior-ity" had been established over the U. S. S. R. The way President Reagan saw it, the aim of negotiations was to make the Soviet Union reduce its nuclear forces while the United States caught up. Both sides could then agree on "real" reductions.

But there was plenty of room for argument about detail. It was the responsibility of the State Department and its Arms Control and Disarmament Agency to see that the White House, the Pentagon and themselves were at one about the American negotiating position. State was sensitive to the rapidly growing antinuclear movement in Europe. Its main representative at interagency meetings, Richard Burt was, however, almost always outsmarted by the Defense Department's Richard Perle, who not only at first enjayed Secretary Caspar Weinberger's full confidence but who, as Tal-bott makes only too clear, was out to block anything which could obstruct the Pentagon's vastly expanding defense program, and in par-ticular the enhancement of its nuclear arsenal. On the other side, the Russians were far more interested in INF than in START which, as they made plain, would get nowhere so long as the United States insisted on deep cuts in the Russians' major strategic force of land-based ICBMs, without corresponding reductions in the preponderant American nuclear-missile submarine fleet. The United States's basic official negotiating position, the "zero-zero op-tion," did not undergo any significant change during the two years of talks. The slogan sounded fine, but in practice it meant that the Russians would have to dismantle the scores of SS20s which they had already deployed against the West — ostensibly to replace obsolete missiles — in return for an American undertaking not to deploy a new force of 572 Pershing II and land-based cruise missiles. To the Russians, this was a very one-sided proposi-tion. The leader of the INF group, Paul Nitze, must have begun to think the same, for he set about trying to persuade Washington to soften its tough stand. What he wanted was agreement to a more moderate "package" which he and his Russian opposite number had quietly discussed during their celebrated "walk in the wood" — of which Talbott tells us there were several. Provided no new American weapons were brought over to Europe, the Russians offered to reduce the number of their SS20s to the level of the British and French warhends poised against them. But Washington would not budge, and in November 1983 deployment began. The Russians walked out, to start their own new twist in the spiral of the nuclear arms

Both sides continue to engage in what is euphemistically called a "numbers game." The Soviet Union insists on including the Butish and French warheads in its estimates of the nuclear balance between East and West. The United States would undoubtedly do the same if any of the U. S. S. R.'s Warsaw Pact allies had their own national nuclear armories.

Taibott's book is interesting because of the vivid human detail with which he clothes the story. We seem to peruse secret briefing papers prepared for the participants in the meetings; we hear snatches of discussions and telephone conversations; we become involved in Ward onversations, we become intervent in washington intrigues and connivings — particularly those of Perle, acting for the "civilian side" of the Pentagon, and of Burt, his rival in the State Department. If Perle seems a devious, shortsighted and unimaginative creature, it is because that is the way he emerges in Talbott's story, in which all the characters, including the Russian negotiators, obdurate but consist come to life as real people.

Talbott is the diplomatic correspondent of Time magazine. Ever since SALT he has closely followed the United States's arms-control negotiations, and he has obviously met the men about whom he writes. Clearly, too, he has good sources and powerful friends. The constraints of official secrecy may not permit him to reveal the sources which allowed him to keep a "running account of events" in Washington and Geneva. But his story hangs together so well, and accords with so much that is common knowledge, that one is driven to the view that he had the benefit of a steady stream of leaks and not only from those officials whose disaffections and indiscretions all too often became public. We should all be grateful to him for having revealed to the world the political tunnel-vision of some of the men on whom its fate depends. "Deadly Gambits" is a very apt title.

Lord Zuckerman, the chief scientific adviser to the British government from 1964 to 1971, wrote this review for The Washington Post.

This one looked like it might be as easy as Tuesday night's 8-1 romp. Doubles by Kirk Gibson and Lance Parrish contributed to a 2-0 lead in the first. A Gibson homer made it 3-0 in the third.

The Tigers were in the process of administering some painful lessons to rookie Bret Saberhagen, at 20 the youngest pitcher to start a play-off game. Saberhagen, however, maintained his poise, just as be did down the stretch. He allowed only two singles over the final five in-nings of an eight-inning stint, en-abling the Royals to peck away at Dan Petry, who allowed only four hits and turned a 3-2 lead over to Hernandez in the eighth.

A single by Jones and a pinch double by Hal McRae got the Royals even. Hernandez said later be had fallen victim to strep throat and had spent most of the day either in bed or the bathroom. "I was dizzy," he said, "I didn't have command. In a game like this I'm we had chances to win, and we had Lopez was 10-1 with 14 saves in the last at-bats."

The Royals had seen the game open in the same ownhous manner as Thesday's, in which the Tigers took a 2-0 lead, capitalizing on left fielder Daryl Motley's failure to catch a drive by Alan Trammell that capital care his head for a role in the ninth inning of a game that was tied, 3-3. He gave up four hits, but retired Steve Balboni on a pivotal triple.

The Tigers also scored two runs in the first inning of this game, capitalizing on ahortstop Onix Concepcion's bobble of Lou Whitaker's game-opening grounder.
Gibson then rifled a one-out double, scoring Whitaker. Parrish followed with a double, scoring Saberhagen was aging rapidly at this point, but he displayed fortitude by retiring Darrell Evans on a fly to left and Ruppert Jones on a game a long time a game, a long time a tap to the mound.

Cubs Thinking About Playoff Sweep Following Trout's Taming of Padres

By Gordon Edes

Los Angeles Times Service CHICAGO — Steve Trout has a tape of the 1945 World Series in which his father, Detroit pitcher Paul (Dizzy) Trout, pitched in Wrigley Field against the Chicago Cubs. He has no souvenirs of the "Just memories," he said. "It was a game, a long time ago, and I wasn't even there."

Thirty-nine years later, Steve Trout, also a pitcher, took the Cubs one step closer to their first return engagement in the World Series, beating the San Diego Padres, 4-2, Wednesday to give the Cubs a 2-0 advantage in the best-of-five National League playoffs.

No National League team ever has won the first two games and lost the playoff series. Asked about that, Cub Manager Jim Frey said:
"You mean if we blow three in San Diego, how embarrassed will I be? Is that your nice way of saying that? If you are asking how confident I am, I will be confident when Kansas City closed to 3-2 in the we get the 27th out and they call us seventh when one of their valuable the National League champions,

But shortstop Garry Templeton's relay skipped past catcher Terry Kennedy and Moreland scored without a slide. The play ended up being worth two runs to the Cubs, as Cey took an extra base on the throw and scored on Jody Davis' sacrifice fly.

"I knew it was going to be a tough play so I decided to send him home," Zimmer said, "But then the ball short-hopped right to the field-er. I said, What the hell, I'm going to gamble and take a shot.' Luckily the throw short-hopped the catch-

Baseball Umpires' Strike Continues; Substitutes Yet to Face Crucial Calls United Prets International

CHICAGO - Substitute umpires filled in once more Wednesday

chicago — Substitute impires filled in once more Wednesday in place of striking major-league unpires for the National and American League championship series and again were not called upon to make any crucial, game-deciding calls.

After some trouble in Game 1, the substitutes got good notices in the second game of the National League playoffs in which the Cubs defeated the Padres, 4-2. League officials said they were prepared to put another such crew together for Thursday night in San Diego.

The American League substitutes, who had no complaints in Game 1, had one minor incident in Game 2 when the home-plate umpire, Bill Decean, called a third strike on Willie Wilson of the Royals with a

The Lure of Quaintness

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — I went to Nan-tucket to see how the quainting was coming along and whether it had done in my friend Crowley. My last visit had left me fearful that Crowley would end up wearing a Pilgrim costume and dipping can-dles in front of the Moby Dick Antique Post Card Shop. That could happen to a person who, like Crowley, lives in a place that's being quainted. And Nanlucket was being quainted at a prodigious rate. At that time, there had been an iotense proud to be different from the onset of cobblestooes. Cobblestones, cobblesiones. Cobblestones covering up once smooth streets as releotlessly as the lava

In short, Crowley had oot actually been quainted, but he had been mightily tempted. I fear the time is short for Crowley. In the old days on Nantucket, before the quainting began, people like Crowley usually ended up covered with gray cedar

That's because in the days before it was quainted. Nantucket was maioland, whose inhabitants were always described a bit superciliously as "off-islanders."

In those days, merely being a Nantucketer was quaiotoess enough, and, to distinguish themselves from "off-islanders." Nantucketers had their bouses, their cars and themselves shingled in

Though an "off-islander," Crowley has always wanted to pass as a native, and for several years 1 expecied to return to the island one day and find him shingled from head to toe.

Now that the quainting is proceeding at a gallop, I have graver worries. Is it oot a bad sign that Crowley has had a fake gas street light installed outside his house?

I remarked on the absurdity of it. The light it emits at night is a pink electric glow. One has the prurient In New England, a millionaire through ganzy pink lingerie. Hard Times Squeeze Owners Of Citrus Groves in Florida

By Jon Nordheimer New York Tinjer Service ROVELAND, Florida GROVELIND I MINE Symmes put a down payment on a 15-acre orange grove here five years ago, they felt as if they were putting a down payment on life.

For young people growing up on The Ridge, the sandy spine that rises from green ranch pas-tures just north of here and runs 100 miles (160 kilometers) down the center of Florida, ownership of prime citrus land was always the key to the good life.

All that disappeared mooths ago for the Symmeses, the dream turning as barren as the empty field where their orange trees once stood.

"It was a chance to get a step ahead in life," Symmes said, hooking his thumbs into the hack pockets of his jeans and digging the toe of his boot into the white sand. "Now," be continued, "all the work has been for nothing."
But the citrus canker that has state was not the culprit here. While growers search for signs of citrus canker, which has turned up io seven ourseries in the past month and threatens the industry's future, on The Ridge hundreds of growers of oranges and grapefruit are almost beyond carreceotly ruined other groves in the

They lost their trees last Christmas when a great shelf of arctic air moved across The Ridge and turned vigorous groves into life-less fields of spidery ghosts. Their leafless branches, blackened and split like the arms of burn victims, now cover the hills and shadowy pockets of The Ridge. The only green comes from weedy vines snaking up the trees from overgrown and neglected fields.

Canker is only one threat here. The real threat comes from tax collectors, mortgage holders and developers. "People are scared, and they don't know what to do," said Claude Smoak, a commissioner in Lake County, in the Florida highlands west of Orlando.

The growers cannot sell their land, since the bottom fell out of the market when temperatures well below freezing, in three of the

"You can't bardly grow grass on this land," Smoak said, "You can't even call it soil: What it is is a rooting medium. Soil on The Ridge is just something to hold a tree in place."
He had planned "one last roll of the diez" in his own groves and intended to replant trees once the danger of a freeze was past this winter, he said. Now the possibility that canker would destroy the oew trees has lengthened the odds of his gamble, and he said he was not sure what his next move would be.

Land speculation is fueled by projections that Florida will be the United States' fourth most populous state by the end of this decade, with a population of more than 12 million. It currently is ranked as seventh largest in population, with 10 million residents. But developers have encountered resistance to plans for large subdivisions that overtax local re-sources. Interior farming and citrus land has increasingly come under pressure to accommodate the rend. One consequence is that the price of concitrus farmland has tripled in the past several years.
